

To whom it may concern,I purchased my Xm radio subscription in response to a large media company, Clear Channels, purchaseing a large amount of radio stations in my area. They hold a near monopoly of the rock oriented stations in my area. The programming is intolerable, the government never stepped in to stop them from doing this. The XM service I purchased has allowed me a freedom of choice from this monotony. They offer a paid subscription service that is available to anyone with the means to purchase it. I cannot see hw the NAB has a right to limit their first ammendment rights in this respect by buying votes against them. They still hold the vast majority of the public in their listeners. I believe that this action can only be one of pure greed. They have held a monopoly in this market so long that they see ANY competition as contemptable. I believe that competition only improves any given industry by forcing new and better products and ideas to emerge. If the NAB broadcasters in my area would've presented a good product to begin with, I never would have opted to stop using their services. If they are successful in this action, it will only be another case of big business buying off their competition through politics and a flawed legal system. I hope my voice can make a difference in this matter.

Yours,

John C. McGuire
